"Mr. Spahr was apparently much in- the house the body of the late army ofwind. I had walked away about ten feet or so. When I returned I asked my wife where Mr. Spahr was and she said he might have walked around. I looked around the deck and, as I did not find him, went below to look for him.

"We were then about thirty miles from Dover. I did not find Mr. Spahr, but felt no particular alarm, at his Arrival at Dover.

"When we arrived at Dover and Mr. Spale had not made an appearance, we notified the captain and a thorough search of the vessel was made, but he had disappeared. He was not seen pgain after he left us on the deck, so far as I know, although a sailor did say he saw him near the stern and warned him that it was a rather dangerous restriction.

"I cannot say whether Mr. Spahr com-mitted suicide or fell overboard. I sim-ply know he dropped out of sight after the last time I saw him on deck.
